Historical Tidbits #32

Caoimhin McKee

Tidbit #281. There are only 3 major fruits that are native to North America: Blueberries, Cranberries, and Concord Grapes.

Tidbit #282. There are more stars than there are grains of sand on all the beaches of the world.

Tidbit #283. Aspirin was the first drug to be offered as a soluble tablet in 1900.

Tidbit #284. The apostle John was the only one of the 12 to die a natural death.

Tidbit #285. The Catholic Church used to put to death anyone who believed in the existence of vacuums.

Tidbit #286. Seven percent of Ireland's barley crop goes to making Guinness.

Tidbit #287. Thomas Edison, who invented the light bulb, was afraid of the dark.

Tidbit #288. A popular game began in the 13th century in Holland called, "spel metten colve" - "game played with a club". This was shortened to just colve, then colf, then golf.

Tidbit #289. Mongooses were introduced to Hawaii to kill the rat population. Unfortunately, Mongooses are day hunters and rats are nocturnal.

Tidbit #290. Before winning the election in 1860, President Lincoln had lost 8 elections for various offices.

The Wolf

(His Song)

I am Leloo the Wolf, the merciless, the wolf.
(Aye, start and cringe! and listen to my song.)
My name the synonym of crime and blood:
True, more than true! Aye, and the tale is long!

Nurtured in poison hate of all your kind,
Since at mother's teat I first was laid,
I carry on the task of murderous waste.
No man shall hear me and be unafraid!

Since in misguided hour of gentler mood
I saved the world that first great prince of Rome.
(Well has man paid the score with treacherous death!)
The world has offered me nor friend, nor home.

So let it be; I fatten on your hate!
And curse the day I feel a softer mood!
With demon cunning I will work your harm;
My whelps shall gorge upon your choicest blood!

My cruel maiming, slaughter past my need,
You'll know my bloody trail across your lands.
Hearing my howl in echoing waves of hate,
You'll know the ancient feud between us stands.

And oft as man shall hear my song of blood
He'll feel a chill fear ripple up his spine,
Cast furtive glances through the darkened wood,
And sense this deadly deathless hate of mine.
